A gentleman now residing in this county received a letter this week from a United States senator, who is an old friend and business partner, which stated that he did not believe the President cared anything about the passage of the joint statehood bill—that in a conversation had with him—the president gave him to understand that its passage or failure was a matter of no importance to him.

The senator further stated that his opinion of the measurs was that the Foraker amendment allowing Arizona and New Mexico to vote separately on their acceptance or rejection of joint statehood, would be adopted by the senate. It would then be returned to the house where it would remain without action until the close of the session—all of this would be just what a large majority of Arizonans will be pleased to see.
